Nell Ledbetter is the author of The Elevator, a reality-bending science-fiction thriller series that blends relentless action, unfolding mystery, and deeply emotional character journeys. The concept for the series first emerged more than twenty years ago while she was riding an elevator to work—a simple moment that eventually evolved into an expansive four-part saga.

A singer, songwriter, actress, and dancer with a background in musical theatre, Nell has spent much of her life telling stories through performance. She began performing at a young age and later worked professionally with various entertainment companies, including Disney, performing before audiences around the world. Those years on stage helped shape her instinct for pacing, emotion, and character—elements that now define her writing.

Although she began writing stories at age twelve, her literary ambitions often took a back seat to her performance career. Now, she is fulfilling a lifelong dream as a published author, combining her love of cinematic storytelling with her passion for creating unforgettable characters and immersive worlds.

Drawing on both her stage experience and creative background, Nell crafts stories that balance high-stakes action with themes of resilience, hope, faith, and human connection. Through her writing and other creative pursuits, she seeks to encourage readers to persevere through adversity and hold on to light, even in the darkest of times.

Nell lives in Los Angeles with her husband and their two daughters.
